Karachi, You're Killing Me! — Saba Imtiaz

“Karachi You’re Killing Me”, is a tastefully written fictional novel recounting the upper crust socialite scene of the city forever immersed in target killings, bootleggers and second hand copies of Birkin bags. This story is enjoyable, fast paced and a delightful read centred from the perspective of a female journalist based in Karachi which allows for a wide range of perspectives from the escapades of Karachi’s upper crust socialites to the conservative middle class bourgeois city ...

Karachi You're Killing Me, a book review - Zardozi Magazine

The tone of Karachi, You're Killing Me is little manic, swinging as it does from farce to deathly serious at times, occasionally with greater frequency than one would expect. Stories of failed dates lead into descriptions of bomb blasts; parties are overshadowed by curfews and potential run-ins with ne'er-do-wells; frivolous fashion shows are paired with economic struggles and bouts of self-loathing.
