Roman Helmets

A galea was a Roman soldier's helmet. Some gladiators, specifically myrmillones, also wore bronze galeae with face masks and decorations, often a fish on its crest. The exact form or design of the helmet varied significantly over time, between differing unit types, and also between individual examples – pre-industrial production was by hand – so it is not certain to what degree there was ...

Galea (helmet) - Wikipedia

Roman helmets had many names, depending on its function, although the most typical roman helmet was the galea, or the imperial helmet (note that galea is Classical Latin for 'helmet'). The imperial helmet was worn by virtually every member of the Roman war machine.

Roman style helmets are some of the most well-known and popular helmets around. They are known for the cheek plates, visor and plume. Not all Roman Helmets featured plumes, it is believed that Generals or Centurions were the only ones to wear helmets with Plumes and soldiers wore helmets without plumes.

Roman Helmets - Gladiator Helmet - Centurion Helmet

In Arthurian legend, helmets were the garments that hid the Fair Unknown and the shadowy Black Knight, while Japanese samurai helmets were designed with fearsome, grotesque masks to make any foe tremble. Greek and Roman plumed helmets identified the soldiers' rank, unit, or rank, normally worn by high-ranking centurions. For the practical LARPer or reenactor, we also have affordable leather helmets for protection in practice and for comfort when worn under more ornate steel helmets.

Premium Quality Medieval and Roman Helmets

Early Roman helmets such as the Montefortino helmets were simple dome-shaped helmets. By the 1st BCE, they evolved into the iconic Roman helmet that we think of today. They were called Imperial helmets or Galea, which means helmet in Latin.
