Religion, Freud believed, was an expression of underlying psychological neuroses and distress. At various points in his writings, he suggested that religion was an attempt to control the Oedipal complex (as opposed to the Electra complex), a means of giving structure to social groups, wish fulfillment, an infantile delusion, and an attempt to control the outside world.

Sigmund Freud's views on religion - Wikipedia

His basis for saying that is from Freud's idea that religion is an outcome of human fear, a fear that came from speculation of a higher being, a higher authority. Freud's argument about religion is that it is the output of what he called the "Oedipus complex" or the sexual desire of the son to the mother (Freud).

Sigmund Freud's most influential teaching is his sexual reductionism. As an atheist, Freud reduces God to a dream of man. As a materialist, he reduces man to his body, the human body to animal desire, desire to sexual desire and sexual desire to genital sex. All are oversimplifications. Freud was a scientist, and in some ways a great one.
